

Hello Caravaggio and Caravaggio maths!

What a strange week! You should have just finished your SATs if you were in Y6. Well, while I'm sure a lot of you are thrilled to have 'dodged' them, I'm sad we didn't get the chance to show people just how spectacular you all are. Not to worry, I'm sure St Robert's will find that out for themselves over the next five to seven years – they're lucky to be having you.

Keep the messages and tweets coming in please. We honestly do love receiving them and getting a glimpse at how you are all spending your time.

I've been very busy with school the whole week just seems to have zoomed by in a flash. I can barely remember any of it! A big thanks to Mrs Kebell who did some really interesting art and maths lessons with the children this week. I came straight home and tried them with the girls.

At home we have been getting stuck in to Martha's 'Victorians' topic and I have enjoyed finding out about real heroes and inspiring figures like Florence Nightingale.

The home baking has steadily continued. Yesterday the girls made delicious cupcakes but must have fiddled about with the ratios (KS2 maths is beyond them – just about) because the food colouring in the buttercream icing basically stained my teeth, tongue and lips bright blue! And I mean bright, bright blue! It looked like I had been hunting Smurfs.

The other fun but immature thing I have been enjoying this week is building Ninja Warrior courses in the front room, but their mam/my wife keeps telling us off 😊 Don't do this at home without a proper adult

What are you all reading Caravaggio? This week me and the girls have read versions of 'The Secret Garden' and 'Oliver Twist' to link in with Martha's school topic. It's great when you can get a feel for something by reading a story or watching a film set in that era.

Caravaggio I urge you to check out TTRS this week. There is going to be an option to attempt a world record. I'm positive some of you could give it a good effort!

Another thing I think is worth doing are the activity pages in the First News newspaper, especially the quiz.

If there is anything you need to ask or anything you want help with please get in touch and I will do my best. I am here for you and there are no silly questions. Mams, dads and carers, please feel free to ask anything and I will endeavour to find out the answer.

See you soon Caravaggio – stay safe!

Mr Quinn
