

Dear Kandinsky Class

I can't believe it has been another week in lockdown, the weeks are just flying by, I hope it is the same for all of you and your finding things to do and keeping busy. I have had a busy week again, on Monday I went to school to look after some of the Key worker children and they were all from Reception, they were lovely but completely different from teaching you! I looked inside our classroom and it is very strange without you all, as though time has stood still. I have completed an online RE course this week and Jay has kept me busy as usual!

Jay's teachers have been posting work similar to the way your work is being posted. Last week he was asked to read about The Hungry Caterpillar and this week The Bad Tempered Ladybird. Following this Jay made a Ladybird and wrote about the story. I have posted a picture of Jay's Ladybird below. Jay enjoys making things although doesn't like writing as much. In maths he has been working on recognising numbers to 20 and has begun to tell the time using O'clock.

During a walk to a park near us we found a tree with a door and Jay was extremely intrigued by this. We made up loads of stories about who might live in the tree and why it was there. I have posted a picture below. Who do you think lives in the tree? Why do you think there is a door there? Jay also loves to look for and count rainbows during our walks, I bet some of you have been doing that? I think about you all the time, especially when we found the tree or are counting rainbows. I wonder if some of you are all doing similar things? We found some other interesting shapes made out of trees including a face and a monkey someone must have carved them into the trees.

On Friday we had a street party to mark the 75th anniversary of victory in Europe. We live in a terraced house with a small garden/yard at the front so all my neighbours stayed in their own space and celebrated from their own gardens, although we were close enough to talk to each other. Some families decorated their houses with flags and red, blue and white to represent the Union Jack. We made a Union Jack for our window, I have posted a picture below. Jay loves to talk to the children two doors down, although knows he can't play with them as he usually would. Their Dad made a cake with a Union Jack on the top which looked amazing. The weather was also really good and we stayed outside for most of the day. I did wonder if any of you were having similar celebrations.

I look forward to seeing you all soon but in the meantime stay safe and try to be good for your parents during this difficult time.

Love from

Mrs Fish
